They read together the numerous treatises which had been written-for the most part in the continental languages-upon the education of a princess. She was familiar with the lives and actions of all who had conferred honor upon the human race, whether as sovereigns, statesmen, scholars, inventors, discoverers, benefactors, poets, or divines. While yet in ber teens, and not yet in her majority, she spoke English, French, and German with equal fluency, she read Italian, and translated Virgil and Horace; she was a proficient in mathematics, and showed decided talent in all branches connected with the science of numbers. Accomplishments were not ne glected, and the princess danced, sang, and sketched from nature. She laid aside a portion of her pocket money to aid her mother is gradually extinguishing the indebtedness of her father.
